5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

SAM NEWHOUSE, REPORTER

In one of Philadelphia's most closely-watched cases in years, a black bike courier who allegedly killed a white real estate developer after an altercation late on July 12 got charges lowered and bail posted after his first hearing on Aug. 1, based on evidence the stabbing was in self-defense, prosecutors say. But while Michael White, an aspiring poet and college student who has been defended by many around the city, may get released on house arrest, he will still be facing homicide charges. 1 REDDIT SAYS USER DATA BREACHED

Social media network Reddit said on Wednesday a hacker broke into a few of its systems and accessed some user data, including current email addresses and a 2007 database backup containing old encrypted passwords. A copy of an old database backup containing very early Reddit user data from the site's launch in 2005 through May 2007 was accessed by the hacker, the social media network said. "Although this was a serious attack, the attacker did not gain write access to Reddit systems; they gained read-only access to some systems that contained backup data, source code and other logs," Reddit's founding engineer Christopher Slowe wrote. Reddit learned on June 19 an attacker compromised a few employees' accounts between June 14 and June 18, according to Slowe. The breach was carried out by intercepting text messages that were meant to reach employees with one-time login codes, Reddit said, adding that it was notifying the affected users. Slowe said the firm hired its first head of security nearly three months ago. "So far he hasn't quit."

2 TROOPS, PROTESTERS CLASH IN ZIMBABWE

Zimbabwe police said three people were killed in the capital city, Harare, on Wednesday as soldiers dispersed stone-throwing opposition supporters who accused the ruling party of trying to rig Monday's presidential election. The soldiers' deployment and their beating of unarmed protesters set back President Emmerson Mnangagwa's efforts to shed Zimbabwe's pariah status after decades of repression under Robert Mugabe, who was ousted in a coup last November. Even before the violence, European Union observers questioned the conduct of the presidential and parliamentary vote, the first in nearly 40 years. Zimbabwe's electoral commission had said it would start announcing results for the presidential race on Wednesday but that was pushed back at least 24 hours. EU monitors said the delay was undermining the vote's credibility. The unrest started soon after Nelson Chamisa, leader of the opposition Movement for Democratic Change, declared that he had won the popular vote. A police spokeswoman said that the three people killed in the clashes had yet to be identified.

4 DANES PROTEST BAN ON WEARING FACE VEILS

Around 1,300 Danes marched through Copenhagen on Wednesday in protest of a new ban on the wearing of face veils in public, accusing the government of infringing on women's right to dress as they choose. Denmark's parliament enacted the ban in May, joining France and other European Union countries to uphold what some politicians say are secular and democratic values. The protesters, many wearing the niqab veil or body-length burqa, marched from the central district of Norrebro to Bellahoj police station on the outskirts of the capital. They formed a human chain around the station and then marched back to Norrebro before dispersing. Demonstrators chanted "no racists in our streets" and "my life, my choice" during the three-hour rally. Marchers included non-niqab-wearing Muslim women and non-Muslim Danes with faces covered. Under the law, police will be able to instruct women to remove their veils or order them to leave public areas. None of the veiled protesters would be penalized since certain uses of face veils are exempt from the law.

5 APPLE'S RIDE TO $1 TRILLION VALUATION

Apple is close to becoming the first publicly listed U.S. company valued at $1 trillion, but exactly how close requires a little math. Based on Apple's Tuesday earnings release, the magic number that gets the tech giant to $1 trillion is $206.49, but maybe not for long. Apple's stock was at an all-time high of $200.48 Wednesday, thanks to the company's better-than-expected results and its aggressive share buybacks. As part of its June-quarter report late on Tuesday, Apple said it bought back $20 billion of its own stock and that its share count as of the end of June had declined to 4,842,917,000, which would mean its stock price must reach $206.49 for the company to hit a $1 trillion market capitalization. Based on the share count listed on its balance sheet on Tuesday, Apple's stock market value was at $971 billion. Apple was expected to file its quarterly report to the Securities and Exchange Commission with an even more recent share count, which may show a further dip due to Apple's buyback program. If that is the case, then Apple would need to hit a higher stock price for that market value.

Rittenhouse Square murder charges reduced, bail posted

Supporters of Michael White, who say he was acting in self-defense when he allegedly killed a Philly developer, supported the move.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

The suspect in the Rittenhouse Square murder posted bail and was expected to be released Wednesday after a judge agreed to reduce charges based on evidence the slaying was in self-defense.

DA Larry Krasner's office withdrew first-degree murder charges against Michael White, 20, in the July 12 fatal stabbing of Sean Schellenger, 37, during a hearing at the Criminal Justice Center. Charges were reduced from first-degree murder to third-degree murder and voluntary manslaughter.

"He shouldn't have been charged with first-degree murder in the first place," said Reuben Jones, an organizer with the Philadelphia Community Bail Fund (PCBF), a group that raises funds to bail out people of color and poor people who are being detained pretrial. PCBF worked with the Philadelphia Bail Fund, a similar group, to raise 10 percent of White's $150,000 bail, set by Judge Charles Hayden after Wednesday's hearing.

As of press time, Jones expected White to be released on bail to house arrest by the end of the day.

"We felt that it was an urgent matter because of his age, his status as a college student, because he was an upstanding member of the community being traumatized by being held in jail prior to trial," Jones said. "We posed this bail so he would not continue to be traumatized by this experience and he would be able to return to his family, to continue to defend his case from home."

White was working as a bike courier, delivering food, at the time he encountered Schellenger, who was in a car with friends, at 17th and Chancellor streets around 10:50 p.m. on July 12.

The incident has attracted national attention as supporters of White have claimed he acted in self-defense and that Schellenger was the aggressor during the fight.

Under circumstances that are not entirely clear, an altercation broke out between the two men, as Schellenger had reportedly gotten out of his vehicle just prior to the incident. One witness reportedly said Schellenger tackled White, and White allegedly fatally stabbed him in the back before fleeing.

White surrendered to authorities within days and has reportedly cooperated with the investigation, for example helping them find the knife he allegedly used and hid on a nearby rooftop, according to the Philadelphia Tribune.

White is an engineering student at Morgan University in Baltimore who grew up in Philadelphia and is interested in poetry, according to a Gofundme page he started to fundraise tuition money.

WEEK 26 7/30-8/5/18

BRIEF

Obama dips into midterm election with first endorsements
Former U.S. President Barack Obama dipped into November's midterm election fight for the first time on Wednesday, endorsing 81 Democrats in 14 states with a focus on young, diverse candidates and lower-level races.

Obama, whose relatively low political profile since leaving office last year has frustrated some fellow Democrats, described the list as a first wave of endorsements and said he was eager to campaign this fall to "make the case for why Democratic candidates deserve our votes."

In a year when the national Democratic Party has emphasized regaining ground at the state level, Obama's list includes five gubernatorial and 40 state legislative candidates, as well as a candidate for agriculture secretary in Iowa and several candidates for secretary of state and attorney general.

Obama's office said in a statement the list was heavy on young and diverse state-level Democrats because the former president "hopes to help current and aspiring Democratic leaders establish themselves, build their profiles, and lead their communities."

Obama also pledged to be active in the battle for control of Congress, where Democrats must pick up two Senate seats and 23 House of Representative seats to gain the majorities needed to derail or stall much of Republican President Donald Trump's policy agenda.

Obama has largely stayed out of the limelight since he left office in 2017, campaigning for Democrats in New Jersey and Virginia last year but limiting his political appearances to closed-door fundraisers for party committees. REUTERS

Babysitter arrested for leaving kids in AC casino parking lot

An Ocean Resort patron notified security after finding a 6-year-old wandering around the self-park garage unattended.

SAM NEWHOUSE

A New Jersey babysitter was arrested in the parking lot of Ocean Resort Casino in Atlantic City after she allegedly left two young children in her care alone for an hour.

Shaun Sanders, 23, was charged with endangering the welfare child and possession of marijuana for the incident, the Atlantic City Police Department announced.

Sanders allegedly had left a 6-year-old child and infant in a car in the Ocean Resort parking lot for over an hour before police located and arrested her. They found her in possession of marijuana during a search. According to police, Sanders was at the casino to fill out paperwork for a job at the resort.

An Ocean Resort patron reportedly notified security after finding the 6-year-old wandering around the self-park garage unattended. They patron found the vehicle the child had left, inside of which was an infant. Sanders allegedly did not return to the garage until an hour after police responded.

Bad babysitter?
"The children were left unattended by their babysitter, Shaun Saunders," a police report said. "Officers were on scene attempting to locate Saunders for more than one hour when she entered the parking garage. She was arrested without incident."

The children's mother was located at her place of employment and the kids were returned to her care, police said.

Atlantic City Police asked tipsters with information about this incident to contact them at 609-347-5766 or text a tip to 411 (847411). Begin the text with ACPD. Tips can be left anonymously.

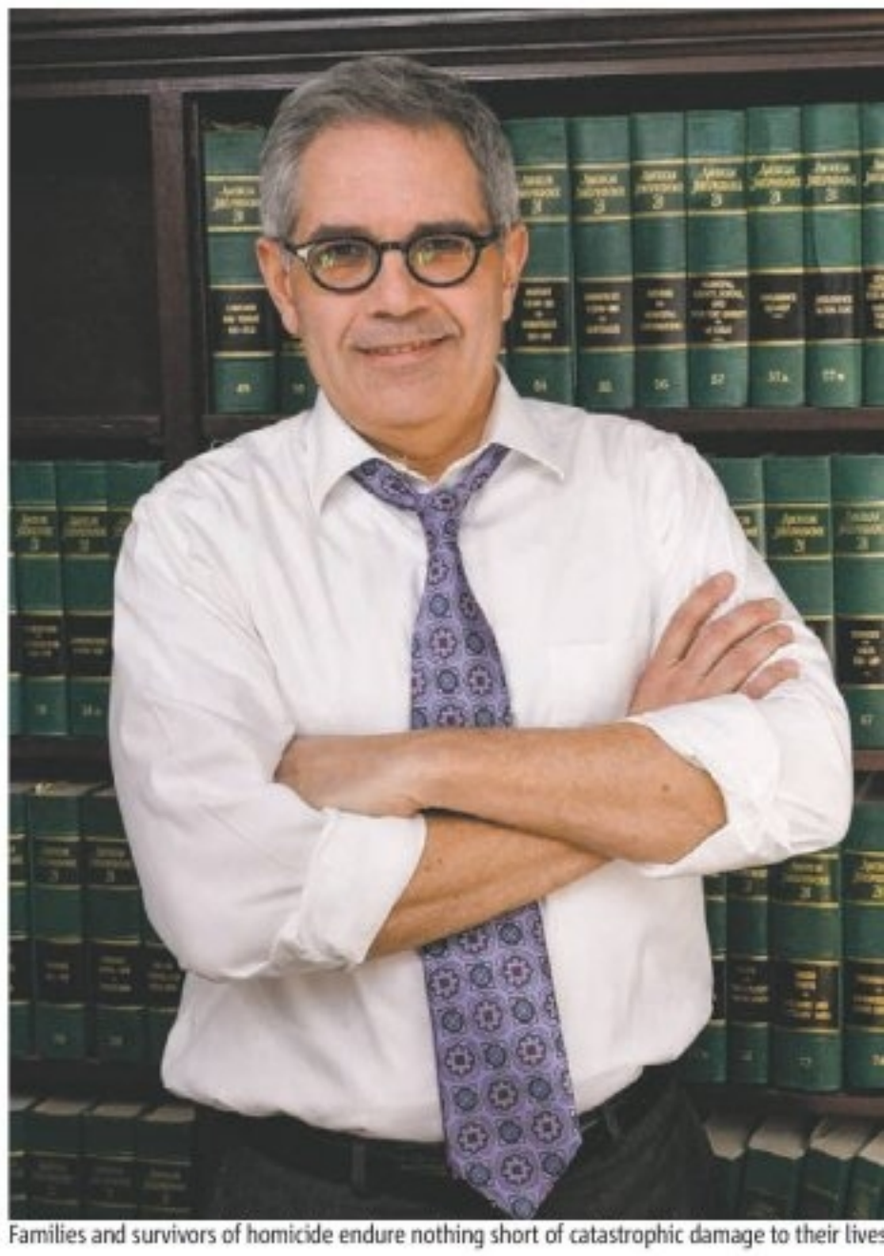
DA Krasner announces new aid for homicide survivors



Families and survivors of homicide endure nothing short of catastrophic damage to their lives

The Philly DA's office is offering a new social service program to aid those bereaved by a recent homicide.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Philadelphia District Attorney Larry Krasner announced on Wednesday the creation of Philadelphia CARES, a new program to provide care to those who lose a loved one to homicide.

Philadelphia CARES, funded by a $1 million grant from the Pennsylvania Commission on Crime and Delinquency (PCCD), is intended to provide advocacy and immediate support to loved ones of homicide victims. No other city agency currently provides such a service throughout Philly.

"Families and survivors of homicide endure nothing short of catastrophic damage to their lives when they lose a loved one, and to make matters worse, they often have to deal with law enforcement, the criminal justice system and service providers alone," said Philadelphia DA Larry Krasner. "But thanks to this grant and Philadelphia CARES, we'll now be able to help."

Philadelphia CARES (Crisis Assistance, Response, and Engagement for Survivors) is set to provide a service many survivors of homicide have long cried out for: help navigating the criminal justice system in the wake of a devastating and often traumatic loss.

"Ensuring immediate and skilled crisis response to surviving families and loved ones in the aftermath of a homicide is vital and necessary," said Pennsylvania Victim Advocate Jennifer Storm. "Support from Philadelphia of losing a loved one to homicide, they will be able to bring their expertise and experience to help other survivors," the D.A.'s office said in an announcement of the new program.

PCRs are to be deployed through a 24/7 telephone service when a homicide occurs, the DA's office said, and accompany police to the medical examiner's office, crime scene or police station when survivors are informed of the homicide.

The PCRs are also set to remain with survivors for a 24-hour period providing help with the multitude of concerns that can arise after a murder: explaining police protocol, interacting with police, handling media attention, obtaining child care and other needed services.

After 24 hours, PCRs will help create Support and Recovery Plans for survivors to address long-term issues that will come up in the months and years after a homicide. In the 45 days after the homicide, PCRs are set to provide services like accompanying survivors to court dates, assisting in obtaining referrals to medical services, communicating with law enforcement and assisting with getting crime victim compensation. After that point, they'll refer survivors to other services and groups that can assist by providing long-term support.

"Experts agree that gun violence and homicide is a public health issue," said Aetna Better Health of Pennsylvania COO Stephanie Ledesma. "Because the CARES model was designed specifically to engage co-victims of homicide immediately following an incident, this work will make a difference in reducing harm and trauma for families that have tragically lost a loved one to homicide."

CARES will allow those who experience unthinkable tragedy and loss the ability to navigate the steps needed to heal and move through the justice system."

"...they will be able to bring their expertise and experience to help other survivors."

Philadelphia D.A.'s office

How Philadelphia CARES works

The core of the plan for Philadelphia CARES involves training 12 "Peer Crisis Responders." Including people of diverse ethnic and language backgrounds, all of whom have lost a loved one to homicide, the PCRs are going to be available around the clock to respond to new homicides. The DA's office aims for the program to be up and running after Labor Day.

"Since the 12 PCRs, who will live in neighborhoods located in different sections of Philadelphia to ensure city-wide coverage, have been through the life-changing experience

Some romaine products recalled due to cyclospora contamination

The greens in question were sold in salads and wraps at Trader Joe's, Kroger's Gordon Food Service and Walgreens. GETTY IMAGES

Wraps and salads at Trader Joe's, Kroger and others may contain the parasite.

SAM BRODSKY
Samantha.Brodsky@metro.us

There's been another romaine lettuce recall, and it's affecting major food stores.

The CDC announced that, as of June 28, the multistate outbreak of E. coli linked to romaine lettuce appeared to have ended (though no lettuce was recalled). Now a romaine lettuce recall is being issued due to a microscopic parasite called Cyclospora cayetanensis. Health officials are warning consumers that the greens in question are sold in salads and wraps at grocery chains like Kroger, Trader Joe's, Gordon Food Service and Walgreens.

The lettuce being recalled was supplied by Fresh Express and used in pork, poultry and beef products distributed by Caito Foods LLC between July 15 and 18, according to a public-health alert from the USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service (FSIS) issued Monday. Products affected by this romaine lettuce recall had "best by" dates between July 18 and 23.

"The problem was discovered when Caito Foods LLC received notification from their lettuce supplier, Fresh Express, that the chopped romaine that is used to manufacture some of their salads and wraps were being recalled," the FSIS wrote.

This comes after a multistate outbreak of cyclospora infection that began in mid-May, was linked to McDonald's greens supplied by Fresh Express. The fast-food chain announced July 13 that it had stopped selling affected salads in more than 3,000 of its locations, according to the CDC.

"The chopped romaine that is used to manufacture some of their salads and wraps were being recalled."
FSIS

What is cyclosporiasis?

Cyclosporiasis is an intestinal illness caused by cyclospora, or Cyclospora cayetanensis, which is contracted by consuming food or water contaminated with the parasite. The FSIS says "consumers may be at risk due to the length of the cyclospora incubation period."

The CDC reports that the "time between becoming infected and becoming sick is usually about one week," but cyclospora can have an incubation period of up to 14 days.

The period of incubation in this case would include the dates of July 25 through Aug. 6, 2018, writes the FSIS. "Illnesses might not have been reported yet due to the time it takes between when a person becomes ill and when the illness is reported."

Infections from this parasite can lead to watery diarrhea "with frequent, sometimes explosive, bowel movements.

"Other common symptoms include loss of appetite, weight loss, stomach cramps/pain, bloating, increased gas, nausea and fatigue," says the CDC. "Vomiting, body aches, headache, fever and other flu-like symptoms may be noted. Some people who are infected with cyclospora do not have any symptoms."

Symptoms can last from a few days to over a month.

DraftKings launches mobile sports betting in New Jersey

DraftKings Sportsbook will let invite-only users place sports wagers anywhere within state boundaries.

Fantasy sports provider DraftKings Inc. on Wednesday became the first company to roll out mobile sports betting in New Jersey, an important milestone as legal sports wagers slowly spread through the United States.

The company's new app, called DraftKings Sportsbook, begins with an invite-only period to let users place sports wagers anywhere within state boundaries. Interested customers can register on the company's website.

As technology and data companies, casino operators, bookmakers and professional sport leagues look to make money off the new U.S. market, many are pushing for the broadest possible access with the fewest barriers to consumers.

The companies also say illegal betting will not be curtailed unless legal wagers are easy to make - on a smartphone, for example.

New Jersey took its attempts to legalize sports betting to the Supreme Court, which in May sided with the state and allowed others to also regulate and tax the activity.

Not all states have opened their arms so widely to the new market. Rhode Island, for instance, legalized it in June but is not expected to go live until at least October and included no provisions — yet — for mobile or online wagers.

Outside of New Jersey and Nevada, where sports betting has been legal for decades, only West Virginia is poised to offer statewide mobile sports bets any time soon.

DraftKings partners with Atlantic City's Resorts Casino Hotel, owned by Mohegan Gaming & Entertainment. GETTY IMAGES

New Jersey's new regulations, passed in June, require mobile providers to operate through casinos and racetracks in the state that already have land-based sports book operations.

For DraftKings, that partner is Atlantic City's Resorts Casino Hotel, owned by Mohegan Gaming & Entertainment. The state's Department of Gaming Enforcement authorized DraftKings' soft-launch period as one of the final regulatory steps to certification before full-scale launch, DraftKings said.

Users can log-in with the same account they have for the company's other products, according to a preview of the app seen by Reuters.

The app automatically calculates a player's possible winnings at certain odds before the wager is actually placed with the click of a button.

It translates opaque bookie jargon, such as "money line," into understandable language, in this case "Who will win?"

The app offers different kinds of betting, including live in-game bets, and it will allow players to exit a wager, or "cash out," if they change their minds.

DraftKings rival FanDuel Inc., which recently merged with Irish bookmaker Paddy Power Betfair, has a sportsbook at Meadowlands Racetrack in New Jersey, but no online product yet.

Expected star witness may not testify in Trump ex-aide Manafort's trial

Manafort has pleaded not guilty to tax fraud, bank fraud and failing to report foreign bank accounts.

Paul Manafort pictured arriving to court for a hearing at US District Court on June 15, 2018 in Washington, DC. GETTY IMAGES

U.S. prosecutors raised the possibility on Wednesday that an expected star witness may not testify against President Donald Trump's former campaign chairman Paul Manafort even as the judge tried to rein in their portrayal of Manafort's lavish lifestyle.

Testimony in the second day of Manafort's trial, the first stemming from Special Counsel Robert Mueller's 14-month investigation of Russia's role in the 2016 U.S. election, was overshadowed by Trump's call for an end to the probe that prompted some Democrats to accuse him of obstruction of justice.

Manafort's consulting work for pro-Russian politicians in Ukraine that earned him $60 million also took the spotlight in testimony in federal court in Alexandria, Virginia, outside Washington. Prosecutors questioned veteran political consultant Daniel Rabin about the work he did for Manafort.

Manafort, 69, is charged with tax fraud, bank fraud and failing to report foreign bank accounts. He has pleaded not guilty to all charges.

Rick Gates, Manafort's former business partner who pleaded guilty to making false statements after being indicted by Mueller, was expected to be a star government witness. U.S. District Judge T.S. Ellis asked the prosecution whether they planned to have Gates testify.

"He may testify in this case, he may not," said prosecutor Uzo Asonye, a day after the defense said in opening statements that its strategy centered on discrediting Gates as an untruthful embezzler.

After the judge asked Asonye for clarification, Asonye said prosecutors are constantly evaluating the need to call a particular witness and his comments were "not to suggest we are not calling him."

Prosecutors have portrayed Manafort as a tax cheat who hid money in offshore accounts, and lied to borrow millions more against real estate in a bid to maintain an extravagant lifestyle once the work dried up.

"Mr. Manafort is not on trial for having a lavish lifestyle"

U.S. District Judge T.S. Ellis

The prosecution called witnesses to hammer home the point. Maximillian Katzman, of New York's elite custom clothier Alan Couture, said Manafort was one of his top customers and paid with international wire transfers.

Prosecution lawyer Greg Andres reviewed how much Manafort spent each year on clothing, including $440,160 in 2013 alone. Ellis interrupted Andres to say, "The government doesn't want to prosecute somebody because they wear nice clothes, right?"

With the jury out of the room, the judge complained about prosecutors' efforts to show that Manafort's life was luxurious and blocked them from showing one document on home renovations.

"Mr. Manafort is not on trial for having a lavish lifestyle," Ellis said.

Ellis chastised both sides for using the term "oligarch," saying the word has negative connotations and could give jurors the impression that Manafort was "consorting and being paid by people who are criminals."

"Of course, there will be no evidence about that," the judge added, and said that oligarchs are merely rich people.

FBI Special Agent Matthew Mikuska, an 11-year veteran of the agency who executed a search warrant on Manafort's Alexandria condo last year, told jurors about the documents that were seized, describing loan agreements and applications, invoices and wire transfers. Mikuska said agents arrived around 6 a.m. and knocked three times before entering the condominium with a key.

The time has come to announce our Grumble of the week winner! We had received a lot of responses to a Grumble about solving "social media fatigue," and this one was one of my favorites. I had used it for a larger story that we had published online about the subject, but here is the whole thing in print for the very first time:

READER WRITE-INS:

It sounds like you have a dilemma on your hands. If you're in a relationship, that might make the dilemma easier to deal with. I am not in a relationship but wish that I was. That's one of my dilemmas. I'm retired. Retirement: That's something I like, something I value. I started accessing the internet in September, 2005, while working as a messenger. I've learned the hard way to spend as little time as possible at social-media sites. And I access the internet for only an hour a day — with rare exceptions. I will look at people's blogs at Tumblr and, sometimes, leave a comment. Same with YouTube. I have my own blog at Tumblr. I rarely will leave a comment at Pinterest. The usual communication at all of these sites reminds me or high school — and I wasn't really a big fan of high school. Maybe somebody will share some revelation with you. Good luck!

Binge this now: HBO's hilariously weird 'Animals' is back for a third season

Phil Matarese and Mike Luciano's genre-bending animated comedy is worth your time.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

Late Friday night, after television exits the coveted prime-time slot, one of HBO's more popular, and weirder, late night shows returns for a third season. "Animals," created by Phil Matarese and Mike Luciano, who premiered the first two episodes at the 2015 Sundance Film Festival and caught the attention of HBO, is back for another round of animated, surrealist comedy.

With the help of brothers Mark and Jay Duplass, "Animals" was picked up for two seasons by the premium cable channel. Two years later, HBO was pleased enough with the show's reception that they renewed Matarese and Luciano's farce for a third season, which premieres this weekend.

What is "Animals" about?
Describing what, precisely, "Animals" is about is difficult. That's because, aside from the New York City rats Phil and Mike, voiced, respectively, by Matarese and Luciano, the majority of the show's slightly anthropomorphized animal characters and the stories they participate in are almost entirely improvised by the showrunners and the rotating celebrity cast they have enlisted.

For season three, the series dives back into the planet's least-habitable environment for a wide-ranging and genre-bending look at a humanless New York following a massive apocalypse. The island of Manhattan has been divided into distinct districts, each of which is largely populated and controlled by different species — rats, cats, horses, dogs and so forth. Meanwhile, season three will also blend live-action sketches featuring human characters with the show's principally animated vignettes.

The acclaimed animated comedy returns for a third season on Friday.

Why you should binge "Animals"
Due to the sporadic and improvised nature of the series' plots, binge-watching the first two seasons of "Animals" is not totally necessary for appreciating season three. Even so, watching all of its previous episodes is not an impossible endeavor, as the episodes are no longer than half an hour and don't require a lot of time. What's more, digging through past seasons is also a great excuse to experience how "Animals" began.

Meet the cast of "Animals"
All three seasons feature a massive, rotating cast of well-known voice actors and celebrity guests. For season three, Matarese and Luciano enlisted Awkwafina, Bob Balaban, Tom Bergeron, Kate Berlant, Bonnie "Prince" Billy, Neil Casey, Marcia Clark, Dinosaur, Jr., Steve Dildarian, Edie Falco, Jon Gabrus, David Harbour, Jared Harris, Mary Holland, Jameela Jamil, Marianne Jean-Baptiste, Jane Kaczmarek, Lucy Liu, Carol Kane, Johnny Knoxville, Lauren Lapkus, John Leguizamo, Donna Lewis, Natasha Lyonne, Anthony Mackie, Tatiana Maslany, Demi Moore, Moby, Tracy Morgan, John Mulaney, Princess Nokia, Aparna Nancherla, Tom Noonan, Soledad O'Brien, Cheri Oteri, Randall Park, Mel Rodriguez, Spencer Rothbell, Paul Rust, Amanda Seales, Michael Sheen, Aisha Tyler, Jacob Tremblay, Joe Wengert and many more.

How to binge "Animals"
The first two seasons of "Animals" are currently available on HBO Go and HBO NOW, as well as Hulu, Amazon Prime and other digital streaming services that offer HBO subscriptions.

"Animals" season 3 premieres Aug. 3 at 11:30 p.m. on HBO.

'Christopher Robin' brings the Winnie the Pooh story to a new generation

Disney hopes to recapture the magic of Winnie the Pooh with this live-action adaptation. ALL PHOTOS DISNEY

Expect a lot of family fun with this latest interpretation of the Pooh story.

Writer Alex Ross Perry opens up about his approach to these classic characters.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

"Christopher Robin" is Disney's attempt to bring the beloved characters and stories of A.A. Milne and illustrations of E.H. Shepard to a new audience. To accomplish that, the studio recruited the vocal talents of Jim Cummings to once again voice Winnie the Pooh and Tigger, roles he's been performing over the last 30 years.

But there was plenty of new blood brought in to oversee this brand new story of Pooh, Piglet, Tigger, Eeyore, Owl, Rabbit, Kanga, Roo, and an elderly Christopher Robin, played by Ewan McGregor, who has become subdued and disgruntled with adult life. The most surprising addition to "Christopher Robin" came in the shape of screenwriter Alex Ross Perry, who before writing the Disney film had primarily worked his movie magic as the writer and director of small indie films "The Color Wheel," "Listen Up Philip" and "Queen of Earth."

We caught up with Perry to chat about the making of "Christopher Robin."

Did just being considered for "Christopher Robin" feel like a win-win situation?
To a certain extent. From that initial phone call, which was in November 2014, up to officially getting hired in March 2015, I just had this idea that this seemed so bizarre and impossible that I was actually staying in the game, and presumably beating other takes that weren't clicking as much as mine was destined to do, it seemed. It just seemed so obvious to me that I could write this movie and do it really well. I was never really second guessing it. I got the job, which felt really satisfying. Then contracts take a little bit. So a couple of weeks later I had reread all of the books and I had to start writing. And those first days of writing dialogue in the voices of the characters, I just said, "Oh my God." Now it is hitting me. Now I actually have to do this as well as I have been telling all of these producers and executives that this movie needs to be done in order to honor these characters. It took me a while to process.

What was the biggest adjustment you had to make writing the film ?
There's two sides to that. One is that the process of doing this was so rewardingly educational, simply because the beats you are hitting are preordained. You are using a template of successfully streamlined studio family entertainment. So the beats are, you have a little prologue. You introduce things. By page 10, you have

"I had to get to a point where I believed Pooh and Piglet and Tigger and Eeyore, that I wasn't just writing fan fiction, but I was writing something that was organic and innate for myself."

introduced this. By page 20 Christopher and Pooh have met. By page 40 they are off on their journey. The structure of all Disney movies, from "Snow White" onward, there's not a huge amount of variation on ones that are made at that level. The biggest adjustment was basically me learning a second language. I knew how to write, and had written my own movies, but I hadn't learned how to write in that language.

Ewan McGregor plays an older Christopher Robin.

It sounds like it was a hugely rewarding experience, rather than constraining.

It was very satisfying after a couple of months of getting to the point where I was very fluent in Pooh, because the first approach in those first couple of frightening weeks was, you know, this is a movie with nine characters that I didn't create. One of which I did create, adult Christopher. But I did not create the idea of "Christopher Robin." I just had to get to a point after a couple of weeks where I had to feel like I had created them. Otherwise I couldn't take ownership of them. I couldn't feel like I was borrowing them and I had to return them in the same condition I found them. I had to get to a point where I believed Pooh and Piglet and Tigger and Eeyore, that I wasn't just writing fan-fiction, but I was writing something that was organic and innate for myself.

"Christopher Robin" opens August 3.

A cure for a broken Heart

Is the Ann and Nancy Wilson feud finally over?

A.D. AMOROSI
letters@metro.us

After their recent feud, can a Heart reunion actually work? GETTY IMAGES

Ann Wilson — the powerhouse loud lead vocalist of Heart — is dropping her solo album of cover tunes, "Immortal," with a show at Camden's BB&T Pavilion on Aug. 4.

Nancy Wilson — Heart's guitarist and brashly rocking composer — will show off her solo chops, and bring her own R&B-tinged band Roadcase Royale, with its new material to Parx Casino on Aug. 12.

Since 2016, the sisters and Heart co-founders have supposedly been embroiled in family squabbles, with each taking a solo break that's publicly threatened the firmament of their now-46-year-old legacy. Words such as "breakup" got tossed out like used guitar picks after a 2017 feature in Rolling Stone made Heart's end inevitable.

But we've come to a new conclusion, a happy one you're hearing here first, based on separate interviews with each Wilson sister.

"I've been reaching out as there are enticing plans on the table for a big tour in 2019," says Nancy of the possibilities of a live reunion. "I'd like to figure out what would be exciting and different for both of us going forward."

"There's an overinflated urban myth that Nancy and I are in some sort of big feud," says Ann. "We worked out our cranky issues a couple of years ago, and have just been enjoying the freedom of time off and doing our solo things."

Nancy's solo road is driven by Roadcase Royale and its funk-rocking co-stars Liv Warfield (of Prince's New Power Generation); guitarist Ryan Waters; and three members of Heart: bassist Dan Rothchild, drummer Ben Smith and keyboardist Chris Joyner.

"I was watching television, Jimmy Fallon's show, around the same time Heart was looking for an opener for its Hollywood Bowl show in 2016, and I saw Liv fronting her band, Blackbird," says Nancy. "She had big soul energy, and intention."

When Blackbird opened for Heart in Hollywood, Warfield told Nancy "she wanted to rock harder. I'd written songs with R&B influence. We had powwows, and with Ann doing her thing and off on her own trajectory, I figured me and my three Heart guys and Liv and her Blackbird guy should get together."

Like her new band, the music — songs such as "The Dragon," "Get Loud," "Not Giving Up" — of Roadcase Royale came together quickly.

"We're like the six musketeers," says Nancy. "The only thing that took any deliberation was our name."

Finding a foil or a collaborator as symbiotic as Ann was a high bar to achieve for Nancy. "That's a good way of putting it," she says. "When you create with anybody, you must respect each other's positions and not be afraid to tell someone the truth — tell someone you want something more sideways, make it more unusual. You can't have too much ego wrapped up in your own idea, or try to be right. It's like a good marriage: there's balance."

"When you create with anybody, you must respect each other's positions and not be afraid to tell someone the truth."

Nancy Wilson

Ann agrees. On her solo album, "Immortal," not only does Heart's guitarist Craig Bartock play, longtime Heart producer Mike Flicker created an understated, elegant canvas for Ann. "Yes, that's a high bar," Ann says of Nancy. "You look for easy musical collusion where the two of you understand and get to where you're going. The song between the two of you tells you what to do."

Songs on "Immortal" are "an oral tradition to be passed along from those who are no longer here," she says. Ann covers songs by Leonard Cohen, Amy Winehouse and others. With Leslie Gore's "You Don't Own Me," Jack Bruce and Cream's "Politician" and David Bowie's "I'm Afraid of Americans," Ann was looking for connection with the currency of sociopolitical thought.

"I'm always looking for a chance to mouth off," she says with a laugh, considering that Gore's song speaks "not only to the #MeToo movement, but to anyone demanding respect, being the LGBTQ community or the black community." As for Bowie, his lyrics are a look "at an extremely materialistic, youth-obsessed media-driven population, and his writing was spare, never flowery and concise."

That's what Ann wants to sing. "I don't really give a damn whether I write the song or someone else did. If it is a cool blend of poetry and groove and melody — I love making that work."

When it comes to the future of Heart, each Wilson sounded quietly optimistic.

"We're not at each other's throats — won't wind up doing a Mick and Keith," says Ann. "No matter what you do or say right, musically, for 40-plus years, it's one negative thing that people latch onto and embroider. … She's my sister. We have a band together, but, we're both growing, and it will be exciting to see — when we do get back together — what we both learned, expanded and can bring into Heart."

"I'm looking to catch Ann's ear soon — sit down in a room with just her, just us," Nancy says. "We should figure out what songs we would do and not, what new and different show we would create. I'm anxious to see how this happens. The fans want this, which is the most important thing."

Mary Radzinski's new comedy album debuts Aug. 5. MEREDITH TROTTER

She's releasing her debut comedy album, "Discomfortable," this weekend.

A.D. AMOROSI
letters@metro.us

Mary Radzinski has been one of the hardest-working comedians in Philly, and it shows. Her insightfully odd, often deadpan brand of stand-up (David Lynch-worthy dating mishaps, an unusual regard for Renuzit) has been honed to perfection on the local stages of Punch Line and Helium during headliner gigs, to say nothing of opening slots for Dave Attell and Jim Norton. And now, Radzinski passes through the doors of tradition with the comedy album. She releases "Discomfortable" on Aug. 5, with a live gig at Helium (where she recorded the album) to celebrate.

What's with you and Renuzit?

You mean my most prized possession in the world? Let me tell you. So, God, I think I was in middle school, when an evening news story said that some guy who did the artwork/background art on the Renuzit air fresheners, had a gripe with the company and quit, but left one last gem. Apparently he put a picture of his dick amongst the flowers/in the background of one of the spray bottles and it was distributed to stores before anyone knew any better. My dad and uncle owned a mom-and-pop family grocery store at the time. I made my mom drive to the store immediately, and sure enough, I found them on the shelves. I located the snake in the grass, if you will. I took one. I still have it to this day. If there was a fire, that would be one of the top three things I would grab on my way out. Not sure of the other two.

What were your first favorite comedy albums?

I feel sheepish saying that I didn't really listen to comedy albums growing up ... blasphemy, I know. Except for Mitch Hedberg albums in college. I memorized them. But honestly, I watched more than I listened to. I was a huge fan of "SNL" and as a kid, I didn't quite get the difference between sketch and stand-up; like, I just figured it was all one big blurred thing, to be a comedian. I remember sneak-watching Eddie Murphy's "Raw" as a kid with my brother, and [George] Carlin, laughing genuinely but also laughing when you were supposed to because half of it was over my head. I loved Gilda Radner. Sarah Silverman. Dave Attell. I loved crafted jokes. My dad was always dropping Henny Youngman jokes. To this day, they are some of my absolute favorites. And like an absolute savage, I confess that I don't listen to albums now — eek. Hypocritical, I will say. I watch specials. Gary Gulman. Sarah Silverman, Rory Scovel, Nate Bargatze. Those are some fave joke writers. I love Dana Gould. There's so many. Gahhhh.

What's the point of "Discomfortable"– that title, the entirety of the live experience?

"Discomfortable" is the punchline of mine, a joke I really like. It's about my boyfriend and how he's "smarter" than I am. I screw up words. I'm close but always a hair off. An example of this is one time I was joking around and told my boyfriend to keep his "beef hooks" off me. Not

"I have the confidence to get on stage and tell jokes and share personal truths..."

"meat hooks." I chose that as the title for the album because it sort of sums up who I am. Yeah, I have the confidence to get on stage and tell jokes and share personal truths in a self-deprecating way, however, I'm always slightly anxious and out-of-sorts.

COMEDY

GETTY IMAGES

Trevor Noah

Noah still seems like the charming new guy at "The Daily Show," but we're starting to miss Jon Stewart less and less every night. Plus, he does the goofiest Trump impersonation and regularly unpacks a healthy dose of international humor. Aug. 4, 7 p.m. and 10 p.m., Parx Casino, The Xcite Center, 2999 Street Rd, Bensalem $50, parxcasino.com/xcitecenter

FAMILY

BethlehemMusikfest

Don't let the title fool you. There's more than music, and it's not all German. Along with day long game and activities for the entire family, clean comedian Jim Gaffigan, Dierks Bentley, Kesha and Joan Jett play on.

COMEDY

Andy Kindler

The comic, best known for the animated "Bob's Burgers," and "Everybody Loves Raymond," can be whiny and sound bitter, and that's a great thing.

Here are some NFL futures bets to place this weekend to beat the crowds.

49ERS TO MAKE PLAYOFFS (+145)

Jimmy Garoppolo was a revelation for the 49ers once he was named the starting quarterback last year. He was a perfect 5-0 after inheriting a 1-10 mess, and his offense averaged 28.8 PPG. 2018 marks the first year of a massive 5-year, $137.5 million contract ($74 million guaranteed) that Garropolo signed in the offseason.

Jerrick McKinnon was brought in from Minnesota to replace Carlos Hyde at running back. McKinnon seems to better compliment Kyle Shanahan's offense as a potent receiver out of the backfield, nd according to Pro Football Focus, he's the eighth-best running back in the NFL at pass protecting.

The Niners shored up their defense late in the draft and added veteran Richard Sherman at cornerback. Their unit may pale in comparison to the daunting but volatile Rams squad, but they should do enough to prevent games from getting away on Garropolo. Expect San Francisco to keep up in if not win the NFC West race; if the Rams play to their talent level and win the division crown, then the Niners should find themselves as a wild card team.

Put money on Jimmy Garoppolo and the 49ers to make the postseason.
GETTY IMAGES

TEXANS TO MISS PLAYOFFS (-115)

The Texans will try to bounce back from a dismal 4-12 season that saw them lose J.J. Watt and Deshaun Watson far too early in the campaign. Watt is a stud and Watson was brilliant in his seven games as a starter, but both have a long history of injuries that make them tough to rely on.

Houston's draft was well-reviewed but was graded on a curve as they had no selections until the third round. Tyrann Mathieu signed as a free agent to bolster the secondary, but the Texans didn't add enough difference-makers to keep up with the Titans and Jaguars.

SAINTS TO MAKE PLAYOFFS (-150)

New Orleans strengthened their defense with veterans Kurt Coleman, Demario Davis and Patrick Robinson as well as first-round selection Marcus Davenport. On offense, Cameron Meredith and rookie Tre'Quan Smith were brought in to reinforce an already-solid unit led by Drew Brees.

The Saints were just one play away from advancing to the NFC title game in 2017.

Phils back home to face Marlins

After splitting a tough two-game series against the Red Sox, the Phillies are now set to take on the Miami Marlins. Coming into this series, the Phillies (59-48) are only 0.5 games up on the Braves for the lead in the N.L. East. The Marlins, however, are in fourth place with a record of 44-60. This is a special weekend at the ballpark as it is Alumni weekend. The Phillies will be honoring the 2008 World Series team, which captured the heart of fans. Former outfielder Shane Victorino will sign a one-day contract on Friday and officially retire as a Philadelphia Phillie. GETTY IMAGES

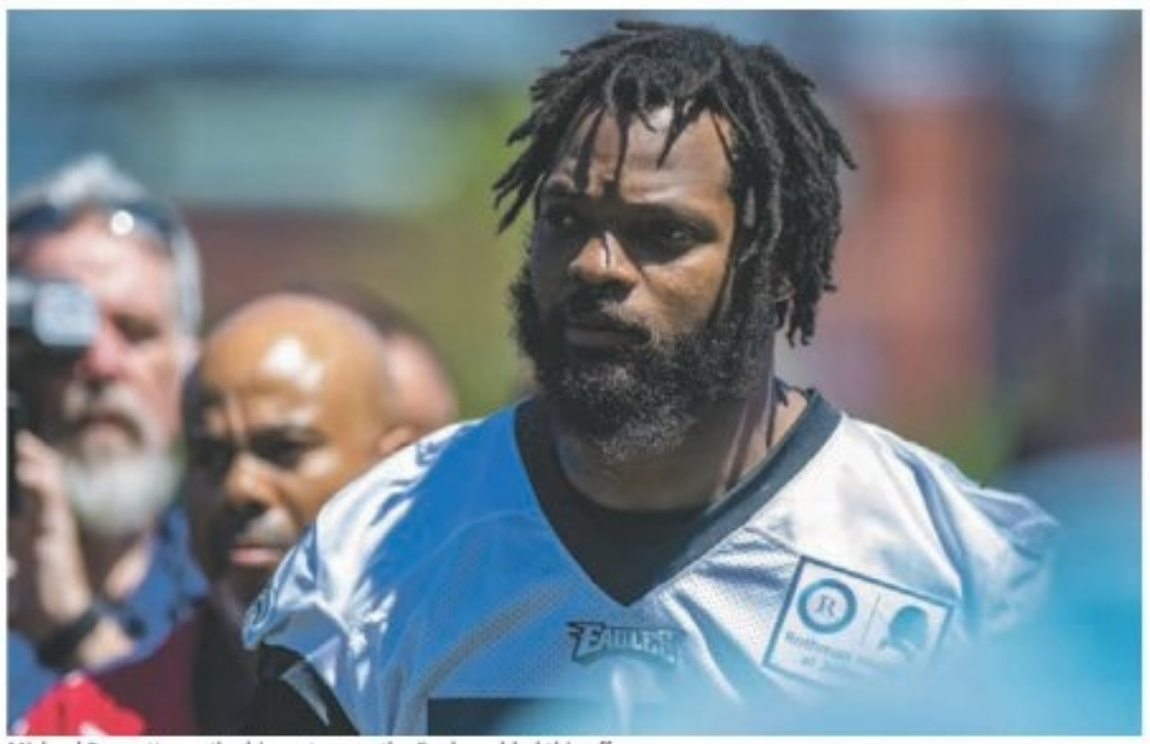
Will fresh faces make an impact?

The Eagles are counting on several new players to contribute this season.

ERIC GOLDSTEIN
sports@metro.us

The Philadelphia Eagles made five shrewd offseason moves last season that helped catapult them to their dream season and euphoric win over the Patriots in the Super Bowl.

Here are five players who could be this year's difference-makers.



Michael Bennett was the biggest name the Eagles added this offseason. GETTY IMAGES

Michael Bennett

Acquired in a trade with the Seahawks, the outspoken 32-year-old brings grit, versatility, and extra snarl to an already formidable defensive line.

He can create havoc for opposing quarterbacks while playing on the inside or at defensive end, and essentially replaces Vinny Curry, who went to Tampa Bay.

The Eagles will limit his snaps, like they do for all of their linemen by constantly rotating them in and out, to keep him fresh and more dangerous.

Mike Wallace

The wideout is basically a clone of Torrey Smith, who was dealt to the Carolina Panthers in the offseason. However, Wallace, who inked a one-year deal, should serve as an upgrade.

Although 31-years-old, he still has blazing speed, giving the Eagles a deep threat, and will open up the field underneath for Nelson Agholor and Alshon Jeffery.

Corey Nelson

At worst, the former Denver Bronco is a key addition to special teams and depth at linebacker. At best, he earns the starting weakside linebacker job (that the departed Mychal Kendricks held) and serves as a safety net should starting linebackers Jordan Hicks or Nigel Bradham get injured.

Haloti Ngata

While Bennett steps into Curry's role, Ngata, 34, is the replacement for backup Beau Allen on the defensive line. After missing the final 11 games last season due to an injury, the five-time Pro-Bowler (2009-2013) is determined to prove he can stay healthy and make a difference. An established run-stopper, his experience will fit in perfectly.

Cameron Johnston

Who? The best punters are the ones that go relatively unnoticed, much like Donnie Jones, who was one of the best punters in the league and retired after last season. The Eagles are hoping Johnston, who was released by the Eagles after camp last year and did not sign with another team, is the heir.
